

A “Lenten Look” for the church:

A change in the appearance of the church can really mark Lent as a “different” season. An austere look seems appropriate to its character as a time of fast and preparation. A feast is best appreciated after a fast.

In some places, the Lenten array (traditionally unbleached linen trimmed in red and black) is used for vestments and hangings. If purple or violet vestments seem too ornate, and a substitute is not practical, a parish might consider the bare minimum of just a fair linen on the altar, with no hangings at all. Traditionally flowers are not used during Lent, and this might be a good time to remove extra candles and other ornamentation which clutters up the chancel and draws the eye away from the cross. The return of these items at the Easter Feast will have added meaning. Many places veil the crosses – a custom which is certainly appropriate for a Christus Rex or jeweled cross, but makes no sense for a crucifix or simple cross. In all cases, the mood created should be simple, subdued and serious.

In the Lenten liturgy, signs of festivity are customarily omitted. Alleluia is not said or sung, and the Gloria in excelsis is not used at the entrance rite. The Great Litany (BCP, p. 148) is appropriate on the First Sunday in Lent, and A Penitential Order (BCP, p. 319 or 351) on other occasions as the entrance rite. The Book of Occasional Services provides Prayers Over the People (p. 25) as Lenten blessings. In actual fact, this form of blessing is more ancient than the more recent Trinitarian form commonly used.

Lent is an ideal time to increase the use of silence in the liturgy. In the Prayer Book the rubric “silence may follow” has been inserted at many points in the various services. The parish musician is in a unique position to provide for this period of silence after each of the first two readings, and again at the Breaking of the Bread where the rubric indicates that “a period of silence is kept.” The Fraction Anthem, after the silence should be of sufficient length to allow for preparation of the bread and wine needed for the communion of the people which follows.
